MORMON WOMEN.

One of the greatest obstacles to woman suffrage is the indifference of women to the wrongs they are alleged to suffer because they are deprived of it, and the greatest obstruction to the punishment and abolition of polygamy is the support which the institution receives from the women whom it is alleged to degrade. Of course it is possible that they are a grade of women who, so far from being degraded by a polygamous marriage, would be elevated by it, and that, bad as it is, it is better for them than no marriage at all, or a marriage whose ties, bonds and obligations they would not faithfully recognize or fulfill. However this may be, their Gentile sisters admit that they are very unpromising subjects for reformution, and that quite as much as the male Mormon, they are the life and support of the institution. One "Gentile Woman" writes to the Salt Lake Tribune that she warned a Morman woman, being the first wife of a polygamist, she need not vote; that her not living with her husband since he took his other wives made no differences nor whether she sametioned his acts or not. When this woman was sick she and other Gentile women took care of her, and heard her on her sick-bed defend the "divine command" which made her a polygamist; the Saints forsook her, but the Gentiles nursed her. In spite of all these influences, however, the woman and her daughter voted and voted the Mormon ticket. Some of the Mormon women, "from whose eyes the scales were supposed to have fallen," refused to abstain from voting as they might, and voted the Mormon ticket. "It makes me perfectly wild," says the Gentile woman, "to hear these women, after kindness upon kindness has been done them, go on gibbering about that country belonging to the Saints, given them by God, and the United States government's persecution of them." A generons and intelligent woman said she could spare to the Chinamen and story of giving a stone when bread is ASTORIA LIQUOR STORE that hereafter she should give what not waste it on these false and fraudulant Mormons. She advises other women, if they desire to alleviate a fellow-woman's lot, to first make sure whether she is worthy of it -"wheth- duce tan-bark. There are great areas er she does not go against the country." These, evidently, are practical difficulties in the way of reforming need during the present century. the Utah abominations, which legislation must take into account. CHINESE EQUIPMENT.

A Chicago man, recently from China, says: "China is far better equipped to go to war than Europeans or Americans generally think. I den't know the number of troops in the Chinese regular army, but I have no doubt that at a necessity she could, on very short notice, raise from 500,000 to 1,000,000 well-drilled and finely-equipped men. The standing European plan by European instructors. There are eighteen viceroys in China, and each viceroy has an array of his own, which would be at the command of the general government in case of war. These vicerovs' troops are more than militia-they are regulacs. China has for years been supplying berself with improved arms. She has purchased, through German merchants doing business in THE LARGEST STOCK OF CANDIES her towns, all the needle guns which Prussia used when she went to war with Austria in 1866. She has fully 2,000,000 of them, besides Schneider rifles and also some Remington rifles. I have no doubt that China could easily arm 500,000 men with these improved arms. China has also purchased through European houses, a number of Krupp and Armstrong cannon. The Chinese navy is of formidable strength. It includes about a dozen men-of-war of the latest armament and power, a dozen corvettes and another dozen revenue cruisers. Each of the latter carry three heavy guns. Some of these vessels were constructed in England and some in Germany. All the war vessels have English engineers, and some of them are officered by Englishmen. The Chinese are making modern cannon themselves now. They have founderies near Shanghai, where they are MERCHANT TAILOR, easting steel cannon. They are made No. 4. Apparently there are large arsenals in China, where arms and vast quanti- and satisfaction guaranteed. ties of ammunition and other mate rials of war are stored. THE MONUMENT MANIA.

THERE is more or less sentimental nonsense floating about regarding monuments to Washington and other great men, and it has very little substance. Aside from the expression of reverence or regret chiefly confined to family cemeteries, the principal use of mounments is a memorial use. Before writing was common or printing invented the monument was a substitute for history. On its sides, or upon its facades, the exploits of the king or the warrior were sculptured, either in pictures or written characters.

These monuments were the archives of the nation, the record of the CREAT NOVELL9 QUARTETTE reigns. The monument of the present day is a rudimentary relic of the obelisk and the colum, the pyramid Piantion and Jubilee Songs. and the bass-relief. But printing has done away with all that. If there was a monument to Washington in every county of the United States, it would not preserve his memory as effectually as the printing press has done. There is scarcely an issue of the public press that does not, in some way, recall his existence, his character or his deeds. Every library contains several histories of him; school books abound with references to him. The American citizen is reminded of him in a score of ways and not at all by a monument. If all the monuments of all great men that have been erected during the modern era were blotted out of existence, or had never been built, it would have had no more influence upon these great men's fame or no more affected the esteem in which they are held, than destroying all the maps of the heavens would dim the light of the stars. It is not "shameful" or "disgraceful" not to erect monuments, because they are no longer any meaning in that act. Real and efficacions testimony to the virtues and good deeds of a man is some times sacrificed to this idea of monu ments, as in the case of Peter Woodland, the assistant superintendent of the tunnel now building under the Hudson river, who sacrificed his life to save those of his workmen. A movement to erect a costly monument to his memory is reported to be thriving, while his widow is starving. This is "shame ful" and disgraceful. It is the old
